Evaluate the Educational Needs of Adults in the Region *

The Consortium conducts an environment scan annually provided through services from Hanover Research. The scan evaluates demographic, industry and program delivery service trends. This information provides members of the consortium with guidance related to future investments in programming, outreach and initiatives. Below the information has been organized into three sections. Information analyzed in the Launch Board and reported by the Yosemite (Stanislaus Mother Lode) Consortium, a Stanislaus County Environmental Scan and a Mother Lode Region Environmental Scan.

CONSORTIUM LAUNCHBOARD ANALYSIS: Total number of individuals enrolled in adult education programs saw a significant drop in reviewing the past five years: 16/17AY = 5,561, 17/18AY = 6,453, 18/19AY = 6,415, 19/20AY = 6,051 (pandemic in Spring 2020), 20/21AY = 3,922. The most significant impacts were to ESL programs and ABE programs. ASE and CTE program enrollment held steady given the pandemic impact.

STANISLAUS COUNTY ENVIRONMENTAL SCAN: Stanislaus County's average adult educational attainment level is lower than the educational attainment levels in California and the United States. In 2020, 79.8 percent of Stanislaus County's population over the age of 25 had graduated high school or higher. In the same year, 83.3 percent of adults in California and 88.0 percent of adults in the United States had graduated high school or higher. Within Stanislaus County, 95351 Modesto had the lowest education attainment.

The most common barriers to employment among adult learners in the Yosemite Consortium are low levels of literacy and low income. Other common factors that adult learners in the Yosemite Consortium report as acting as barriers to obtaining employment include being an English language learner, experiencing cultural barriers, being a single parent, being a displaced homemaker, and experiencing long-term unemployment.

While the agricultural industry continues to play an important role in Stanislaus County, other growing industries in the region include healthcare, social assistance, trade, transportation, and utilities. Currently, one in eight jobs in Stanislaus County is directly tied to agriculture or related food manufacturing; however, the largest industries in the county are projected to be trade, transportation, utilities, private education, health, social assistance, healthcare, and government by 2028.

Hanover identified 35 providers of adult education offerings in Stanislaus. The most common adult education type offered by providers in the area is CTE programs. Among all CTE programs, trade-related programs are most common. Other common offerings include high school diploma/GED programs, citizenship courses, and English as a Second Language (ESL) courses. Most offerings are delivered in person.

MOTHER LODGE REGION ENVIRONMENTAL SCAN: Mother Lode's population is older on average than the rest of the nation, and the total population in the region is projected to decrease over the coming decades. As of 2020, the median age in Mother Lode is 50.8, almost 13 years older than the median age in the United States. The aging populations in Calaveras and Tuolumne Counties are projected to grow, necessitating a larger healthcare workforce in both counties. In addition, the growing elderly population will create many jobs in nursing homes and senior care facilities.

As Mother Lode's aging population will increase, so too will the labor market demand for related healthcare occupations. Personal care aides, home health aides, and medical and health service managers will all be among the fastest-growing occupations in Mother Lode through 2028. In addition, registered nurses, medical and health services managers, and medical assistants will all be in high demand in the area, as labor market projections forecast an employee supply gap in these fields.

Compared to California and the United States, educational attainment levels among adults in Mother Lode are high. As of 2020, 90.1 percent of Mother Lode's population over the age of 25 had graduated high school or higher. Adult educational attainment levels in Calaveras and Tuolumne Counties outcome are higher than the educational attainment levels in California (83.3 percent) and the United States (88.0 percent).

Within the region, the largest workforce gaps are in the business, health, energy, construction, and utilities industries. Within the Northern Mother Lode region, the health sector has the most annual openings, more than 7,900, followed by business and entrepreneurship, which has more than 7,000. The largest supply gaps in the area will be in business and entrepreneurship, health, energy, construction, utilities, and advanced transportation and logistics.

Funds Evaluation *

The Stanislaus Mother Lode AE Consortium discusses and reviews the annual plan for the region taking into consideration the three-year planning documentation and the evolving changes of the region and member programmatic goals in servicing needs. Members further review and assure that annual work and associated allocations are linked to these planning documents and are consistent with CAEP state guidelines. The Yosemite Consortium (Stanislaus Mother Lode Regional Consortium) proposes to improve and expand adult education in Stanislaus, Calaveras, and Tuolumne Counties by focusing on the following three priorities as identified by consortium voting members.

1. Expand programs currently in existence to include English as a Second Language, Career Technical Education, and Adult Secondary Education.
2. Reduce barriers and increase access and success for adult students by providing child care, career and college coaches/counselors, and increasing program offerings to include both day and evening classes at additional locations throughout the three-county area. Additionally, we will increase technology and classified support to these programs in the form of updated software programs, distance learning sites, and clerical and para-professional support.
3. Implement high wage/high demand courses and opportunities that will lead to specific industry certifications.

Carry-over funds will be implemented according to guidelines directed by CDE AB104. The AE Stanislaus Mother Lode Consortium will share during the first quarter of each academic year updated individual workplans from individual consortium members.
